Bye  Collingwood

My new pastime: finding images that epitomise Geelong's domination over all competitors. This week: Geelong v St Kilda:

"And behold, Holy Kiteh did go forth unto the Gee, stretched forth His paw and said 'Meow'" – Whiskers 5:17

Thank god Collingwood had their bye this week. It means that I can completely avoid all mention of them in my wrap-up and instead pose a Miller Analogy Test question:

Tiger Woods is to mad golf ball skillz as Gary Ablett is to ?

For the third time now, I've been pipped for the weekly prize, this time by Larah who managed this season's third perfect-8. I plan to do a theoretical investigation for a future wrap-up of how much one can improve the odds of a weekly prize with access to inside knowledge. Completely theoretical, of course.

Jesse continues to successfully tip losers, though the elusive perfect-0 slipped past him again this round. You'll be pleased to know (well, hopefully Jesse won't be pleased) that I have an idea for a last place prize that is truly, truly befittingly awful. Muah ha ha ha.

Oh, and since he is now back in the fold, no-one tell George what I did to his tips while he was away...

[Editors note: Eugene stupidly came up to me and told me that his Saturday's tips were submitted 1 minute late. I hadn't noticed, but under a technical enforcement of the rules (and fear of George chucking another hissy) I had to rescind them

Honesty is the best policy - when there is money in it.

AFL Word Search

The images around the word search below are clues to the surnames of 34 current AFL players hidden in the grid. Once you have found all these entries, read off the remaining letters to get my prediction of who will win the 2011 tipping competition.

Lookalikes

Dale Thomas, Dyson Heppell and Sam Wright. I thought hair like this died out with Homo Neanderthalensis
