Byes:  Hawthorn

16 games and finally another win...just:

Golden Flying Ninja Cat Attack....

Unfortunately, Collingwood are currently in top place on the ladder and there aren't as many amusing magpie images as there are cat ones (though I'm picturing a Stymphalian tidings of magpies blotting out the sun next week). Fortunately however, Collingwood players are stupid enough for me to compile alternate images:

An amalgamation of two Mark Knight cartoons

Quick recap for the non-footyphiles: Collingwood player Heath Shaw was found guilty of using insider information and betting on Captain Nick Maxwell to kick the first goal in Round 10, knowing that Maxwell was to start in the forward line. He received a 14 week suspension, 6 of these suspended. What the hell is a "suspended suspension" anyway? Does this mean if he reoffends, he'll get six weeks added onto a likely club sacking?! Shawly it's just a coincidence that the now-eight-week suspension aligns perfectly with Finals Footy; he can go and have an eight-week vacation in Arizona in the meantime.

Perhaps it was the extreme inundation of Sportsbet odds at football venues, or on the television during the sports segments, or in the newspapers (or in this tipping competition ?!), Perhaps it was the advertisements for Bet 24/7 that appear around the fence during the match. Perhaps it was the uncanny prevalence of player names like Ryan Gamble, Eddie Betts, Brent Staker, Kurt Tippett or Chance Bateman, Whatever the reason, it just proves that you don't have to be smart to play football (for Collingwood at least).

In tipping results, I'm still on top. Nothing more to see here, move along.
